Climate Crisis and the Question of Justice

10–11 November 2025

Scout Institute

Staroměstské náměstí 4/1, 110 00 Prague

Deadline for applications: 15 October 2025

The international conference creates a space for an interdisciplinary meeting on the major challenge of our time: various impacts of the climate crisis on society and efforts to mitigate it. The broadest aim of the conference is to promote critical reflection on the climate crisis as a complex phenomenon affecting different areas of social, political and cultural life. We welcome contributions from the humanities, social sciences and law, as well as interdisciplinary approaches that take into account both the theoretical and practical implications of climate change. The conference builds on the success of the first edition and seeks an open dialogue between academia and the wider community. It offers a platform for sharing research results, critical perspectives and practical experiences that contribute to a deeper understanding of this urgent global crisis.

The second edition of the international interdisciplinary conference will welcome experts working on the issues of climate crisis and just transformation, adaptation measures and policies, status and conditions of climate activists, impact of climate change on society or its theoretical reflection in the social sciences and humanities.

We particularly welcome contributions in the following thematic areas:

- disinformation and the climate crisis,
- activism related to the climate movement,
- local solutions to the climate crisis,
- climate crisis and social classes,
- legal aspects of the climate crisis and future generations,
- societal resilience.

We accept papers in English, Czech & Slovak, with a deadline for applications by 15 October 2025.
